Roman historiography is indebted to the Greeks, who invented the form. The Romans had great models to base their works upon, such as Herodotus (c. 484 – 425 BC) and Thucydides (c. 460 – c. 395 BC). Roman historiographical forms are different from the Greek ones however, and voice very Roman concerns. The Roman style of history was based on the way that the Annals of the Pontifex Maximus, or ...

When I came across this 700-page book several years ago, I was more than happy to add it to my personal library on church history (a topic on which I own a dozen volumes). Beginning in the time period of Josephus and moving through the 20th century, the book's articles are crisp and well-written by a variety of authors.

It's a very important piece of history - the first real, proper history that the English wrote about themselves - and it's one of the earliest pieces of church history. The third thing about it is that it's just delightful. Christian history had been going for six centuries or so; there were little fragments of history in some big books.
